LESSER SLAVE LAKE

(Special correspondence.)

One night in the first week in January a few of the boys dropped in at Ben Crangbark's shack, the only place around here where a fellow can stretch his legs out straight and enjoy himself without restraint. After the weather and kindred topics had been threshed out, conversation gradually stopped till the mournful howl of a husky over by Bredin's store, and the bang bang of a tom tom at a tea dance down by Squaw's point, were the only sounds that broke the stillness. Conversation flagged for about five minutes when "Dakota Jim," a remnant of the late rush, slowly drew his legs into a jack-knife position and declared himself as follows: "Now, fellows, I wintered over in the Kootenay last year, and the way things are going here brought it to mind; not a bit of excitement and time hung heavy as debt, till my partner, a fellow named Black, from Golden, got the outfit moving by springing the idea of a concert or general good time on them. This is the way he put it: 'Let every man in camp get his thinker a moving and prepare himself to do a turn in two weeks time, and no second hand performance either, remember, but something all your own.' Well, they all started in. Doc, Hielock, a man of learning who was wintering with us, passed his verdict, 'Capital,' he said. I didn't take any part in the show because I'd gone to Fort Steele for liquid groceries. The snow fell as high as your head and I was lucky to get back at all. Now, fellows, here is the point: What's the matter with us giving the same thing here?"

Two or three more of the boys had dropped in during Jim's talk. When he got through opinions were given one way and another. Some of those present, who up to now had been filling us up with stories of the ice they used to cut back east, at swell parties and such like, didn't seem to care about the idea. However, enough stood for it and it was agreed upon. Le Barke, a man of points, was selected to pick out the time and place, notify the different men who didn't happen to be around, and kind of run the thing when the time came, stage manager, as it were. Well, the time came round and how fast only some of us can tell. This thinking about something to say in front of other people was hard work, harder than many of us had ever done before. Jim had mentioned original poems, and Alex. Priestman, in an abortive attempt to compose one, spent nine days in agony and nine nights in insomnia and at last "went wrong." Ginger with a dash of peppermint was his salvation. He is conversant now, more subdued than formerly, but wiser. This was the worst case, one or two others were somewhat similar, but ginger in all cases seems to have been a successful antidote.

The eventful night arrived and unfortunately the weather was grand. The crowd that turned up represented both native population and Klondikers. The former predominated and earned our everlasting gratitude, for human nature is the same here as in the south and elsewhere. It's bitter cold at times, but never so bad as to freeze a man's pride in his own efforts, hence our gratitude towards the dusky bucks who clapped long and loud for every number. In fact there was so much enthusiasm displayed that Joe Bettle was unable to get his hat on in the four mile drive home.

Le Barke got the crowd quiet after considerable argument and the fun began.

Bob Bert, a man who looks pleasant in all kinds of weather, was the starter. He came forward promptly and his beaming smile put everyone at ease. He told us his efforts during the time that had elapsed since the show had become a certainty had been spent in gathering a few experiences of his own during the late rush. His talk was great. His memory, or imagination, is very retentive, and it certainly was very impressive for when he wound up by quoting as follows from a sign board that stands at the summit of the Swan Hills where the trail passes: "Due north, Dawson City, starvation and death; due south, home sweet home and a warm bed," tears were shed and strong men shook hands with themselves.

Several more of Willow points representative townsmen responded to their names with more or less discredit.

Things were now getting a trifle slow and chilly. (It takes more than two candles, one on each side of a packing case situated at the extreme end of a shack 36x20 to keep it warm, with zero weather all around the outside.) At this stage of the game French Joe, a man with a poetical hair cut, came forward on Le Barke's invitation, and his attitude from the start woke up forgotten memories of dialogue days. He spoke in French and was understood here and there in the shack, but not often. The majority of us left the east after the 3rd book, and some before. Thanks to Le Barke we are able to give the following interpretation to part of French Joe's contribution:

"A pleasant girl with golden curl,
A clever youth with prospects bright,
Two pair of skates, a jaunty air,
That's what I saw one winter's night.
A village churchyard on the hill,
A granite monument cold and grey,
The inscription ran 'drowned by the mill'.
That's what I read one winter's day."

A sad feeling laid hold of us towards the last line or two which was not dispelled until we had returned from old Kan-no-Kan's tepee, where two dozen of ginger were cached, and prepared to continue the last half of the programme. It opened with an address from Le Barke, who told us how proud he felt at the opportunity to lord it over us. He spoke for a long time of the pleasure he experienced in listening to French Joe's poem in the original, and explained that a great deal of the pathos was unavoidably lost in the translation, and wound up by telling us a number of things we never knew before, and then called on old Kan-no-Kan for a few words. This distinguished representative of his race is a descendant of one of the first families in the country. He mounted the packing case and squared himself after the style of his forefathers, with his arms folded across his chest and his shoulders arched well up. A four point H. B. blanket fell in graceful little pucker barely to his knees. His only ornament was a horse blanket safely pin just beneath his chin: "Once seen never to be forgotten." To my mind Kan-no-Kan will never look as well in poetry as he does in life. He spoke a long, long time on different subjects,—no doubt. There is no certainty about it as the interpreter was discussing treaty with "Buckshot" Ferguson, so Kan-no-Kan's oration will never go down to posterity. He eventually calmed down and subsided, when Le Barke commenced the wind up, a poem on the skater by the father of the show, Dakota Jim. He got a warm reception and prefaced his poem with a short history of how he came to write it. "It was over in the north Pine river," he said, "things were going bad, there's another word that's more expressive, but I'll not use it (deafening applause). I made up my mind one morning to take a day off, so I strolled down the imitation of a trail we were following and picked out a green bit of grass and the following poem is the result. I christened it, 'He reckoned without his host' and it speaks for itself: 'An idle fellow, a summer day, a shady spot and down he lay, a skater hot humming his lay, and searching for gone along that way. A tragic ha! ha! discovered his lay, as he capied his intended prey, my story's told, he failed to connect. He landed on the 'skaters neck.' Without a doubt Jim will be our first mayor. A committee of our leading townsmen presented him with a corner lot at the close of the evening's entertainment."

SUPREME COURT.

Court adjourned on Friday afternoon, to sit again on Tuesday, April 4th.

The last criminal cases disposed of were the Queen vs. Weiler, of Wetaskiwin, charged with attempting to damage a threshing machine, the property of one Swanson. The prisoner pleaded guilty and was allowed to go on his own recognizance in $100 to appear and stand his trial if ever called upon.

In the Queen vs. Wm. Whittaker, charged with the same offence as an accomplice of Weiler, the prisoner was discharged, the judge intimating after five witnesses had been examined and the crown's case was in, that he did not consider there was sufficient evidence to establish a case.

In the civil action of Gallagher vs. Sand, judgment was given for the plaintiff's claim and costs.

The general public does not realize the vast sums that have been spent in Cariboo by such well known British and Canadian companies as the Cariboo consolidated company, which has the largest hydraulic works in the world, the Cariboo Gold Fields company, the Cottonwood Alluvial company, the Golden Province company, the Golden River Queenelle company, the Slough Creek company, and other bodies. These companies have been working for years driving tunnels to old channels of rivers and fighting the water. It is only now after many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent that returns are being looked for. When these companies do begin to take out gold it is expected that they will add millions to the output of the world.

The first Canadian Pacific railway settlers excursion of the year left for the west on Tuesday afternoon last. It consisted of about 500 passengers from Western Canada. The Grand Trunk train to North Bay was diverted into two sections.

Fifty thousand immigrants will reach the Canadian west this year, according to the prediction of deputy minister of interior, Jas. A. Stuart. He estimates that the number will be made up of 20,000 from England, Ireland and Scotland; 8,000 from the United States, and from 6,000 to 10,000 from other European countries, principally from Belgium and Denmark.

WETASKIWIN Free Lance: Mr. Thor. Ross and Mr. Ralph Walker have returned from Lesser Slave lake, where they had gone on a freighting trip, taking up goods for Fletcher Bredin. They made one of the fastest trips ever made over that road, following the river and Lesser Slave lake. The trip north was made in 17 days from Wetaskiwin to the lake, and the return from the lake to Edmonton was made in nine days.

NEW HOSPITAL.
A meeting was held on Saturday afternoon in Dr. Harrison's office to further discuss the question of establishing a non-sectarian hospital here. The report of the committee appointed to enquire into the question of buildings, etc., for a present temporary hospital was read and referred back to the committee.

It was decided to hold a public meeting in Robertson Hall on Tuesday, March 21st, at 8 p. m., to receive and consider the report of the committee, and take such steps as the meeting may deem expedient.

REPORTED GOLD STRIKE.

Considerable interest has been aroused in town for a few days over a reported gold strike, claimed to have been made by the Neil, Jackson and McLaughlin party who left here late last fall bound for the Jasper house, per pack train. Reliable information is hard to obtain, but it is known that one of the party came out to Golden B. C., on the main line, and posted letters there to several parties here.

A. C. Eaton and A. Stewart, who are interested in the expedition, left on the 2nd for Golden. The strike is supposed to be in placer diggings situated on the Canoe river west of the mountains, in British Columbia, and is said to pay $40 a day.

Since writing the above we have succeeded in securing the full and authentic particulars of the strike, but, unfortunately too late for this issue. They will appear in next issue.

OBITUARY.

Miss Margaret Douglas Robertson died on Friday last at the residence of Jas. McDonald here, from the effects of a paralytic stroke, which she received on the 21st of January last, and from which she never recovered. The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon. Service was held at the house and afterwards concluded at the Methodist church, by the Rev. T. Ferrier. At the grave the last rites were performed by Rev. T. Ferrier and Rev. C. B. Freeman, pastor of the Baptist church. Floral tributes from the following friends were deposited on the casket: The W. C. T. U., the Methodist church, Mrs. Bragg, Mrs. Braithwaite, Mrs. Sand. The pall bearers were: W. J. Walker, Thos. Bellamy, John A. McDougall, H. C. Taylor, Thos. Anderson, and Dr. A. H. Goodwin.

The deceased was a member of the Methodist church and an earnest worker in the W. C. T. U., representative of which organization marched with the funeral cortege from the house to the Church.

Deceased was a daughter of the late John Robertson, of Grand Lake. N. B., and an aunt of W. Scott Robertson, of Edmonton.

WHEAT.

Free Press: Deliveries in the country are practically nothing, caused by bad roads and an inclination to hold for higher prices. The average price of 1 hard at Manitoba points is from 50c to 55c, according to the rate of freight. It now appears that a larger proportion of the crop that is good and still in farmers hands, will be carried through to next season unless prices advance. The general opinion of the trade is that we will see lower prices during the grain season, as it is generally admitted that it is a weather market, higher prices being dependent on damage done to winter wheat in the United States, and so far there appears to be little or no injury. Some of the firms are exporting quite a quantity of wheat at the present time, not taking any chances at the opening of navigation as to the condition of wheat. However, the margin is very small, as the old country dealers are not anxious to buy futures. One hard is now worth about 69c at Fort William.
